Exhibition statement

Heirloom is a collection of work which honours the debt we owe to our ancestors both near and far.

Living memories and intricately told family stories are ythologised and shot through with references to our neolithic forebears, whose animal domestication and agricultural practices are still recognisable to us today. But these works go even further back, to the zoomorphic animal sculptures of the paleolithic period which were equal parts religion and science; made for luck, control, education, propitiation, summoning and sacrifice. Heirloom is about memory, genetic legacy and family lore; what part they play in shaping our lives, what we leave behind us when we die and what we carry with us into the dark.
